Introduction

Timesaver Visual Grammar is a rich resource of lively photocopiable grammar practice materials for secondary school students at Elementary, Pre-Intermediate and Intermediate levels. The easy-to-use format and answer key saves preparation time and forms an ideal bank of materials to supplement any coursebook.

Each activity provides thorough and stimulating practice of the main structures found in a syllabus spanning Elementary to Intermediate levels. Through a series of fun and memorable cartoons, students are prompted to produce and practise grammar in context. Humorous teen-friendly characters such as Clubbing Clare and Dizzy Daisy will contribute to students' motivation and enjoyment.

How to use Timesaver Visual Grammar

The activities are divided into two-page sections. The first page always contains a set of picture prompts focusing on production of the target structure. The second page provides further contextualised practice through a variety of exercises – dialogue completion, matching exercises and so on. There is a tense review at the end of each level to consolidate the key structures taught.

The Visual Grammar activities are not intended to present new grammar but to provide practice of recently acquired structures. For this reason, there are no grammar explanations.

Page 1: The first-page section of each activity can be used in isolation, as well as with the accompanying second page. For example, try using it as a warmer at the start of a class, before using the coursebook. Students look at the picture prompts and orally, either in pairs or as a class, produce the correct sentences. Use this as an opportunity to work on pronunciation and contractions, where necessary.

Alternatively, the first page can be used as a revision tool to jog students' memories before presenting a new related structure. For example, you might want to consolidate students' knowledge of simple past tense form and usage before presenting the present perfect for the first time.

With stronger classes, you may even want to use the first section as a means of 'test – teach – test' type presentation: students complete the exercises in written form and try to produce the new structure. You then present the new structure, eliciting form and usage as far as possible from the class, before going on to practise the new structure further.

Page 2: The second-page section of each activity works best as a follow-up to the visual prompts. Once students have revised the structure, the second section gives them the opportunity to practise grammar in context through a range of exercises – question and negative formation, matching activities, dialogue completion and freer personalisation activities.

The emphasis is on written production but there is plenty of opportunity for oral practice too. Get students to act out the dialogues they have completed in pairs or in front of the class, for example. When completing a personalisation activity, ask students to compare their experiences with their classmates.

Time: Approximate timings are indicated at the top of each activity and are based on working through all exercises. However, as has been shown, the material is designed to be flexible. If you have a whole 40- or 50-minute class to fill, there is plenty of scope for extending the activities using the suggestions above. Alternatively, the first-page section need only take a maximum of ten minutes as a warmer before the main focus of the class begins.

Level: This generally corresponds to the structures that most students who have studied for a particular length of time can be expected to have covered:

- ★ = up to 2 years of English
- ★★ = 2 to 3 years of English
- ★★★ = 3 years or more of English

The levels are not in any way prescriptive. Students of higher levels may need to revisit lower level structures, or stronger students with fewer years of English may need a higher level of challenge. All depends on individual classes.

Like our books? You'll love our magazines!

What's more, your students will love them too.

When our magazines arrive in your classroom your students will be instantly motivated. They encourage your students to read and communicate in English by focusing on the issues that young people are really interested in. The colourful pages are packed with photos, articles and activities relating to stars from the world of sport and entertainment as well as teenagers from the English-speaking world.

And you'll love our magazines because they bring all this to your classroom:

Culture

a cultural window on the world of English-speaking countries

Cross-curricular development

students improve their language skills through cross-curricular and interpersonal development.

Grammar

an excellent supplement to your course-book, the magazines present grammar in an integrated and motivating way through interactive and varied activities.

Up-to-date issues

the perfect vehicle for reflecting fast changing teenage issues and fashions

Reading

a way of encouraging the often-neglected skill of reading.

And lots of support for you!

Free teachers' notes come with each set of subscriptions and there are numerous extra activities for students and teachers on our website www.link2english.com. A student CD-ROM and teaching cassette are also available.

Take a look at our www.link2english.com website to see our magazines in full colour.
